Grandparents targeted by scammers

Two scenarios targeting grandparents have been popular with scammers in recent months.

In the first scenario, someone posing as a grandchild calls. They say, "Hey, grandma(pa) do you know who this is?" and once the grandparent gives a name, the caller has their identity. They then ask for money, for food or to help cover a car payment, etc. And of course, "Don't tell my parents."

In other, more alarming, situations, someone calls in a frantic voice, posing as the grandchild. They are in trouble and they need money fast. Through social media, the caller has some specifics about your grandchild to make it more believable. Once the grandparent is convinced, the phone is passed to someone else (a lawyer, doctor, police officer) that gives instructions on sending money.

The best way to deal with these situations, unfortunately, is to hang up. Call your grandchild if you are in doubt and let any other family members know so they are aware.
